

If you are an adult, you have the right to know about all your health care choices. You can say no if you do not want what your doctor says is best. But if you have a serious sickness or are suddenly hurt, you may not be able to say what you want. Then your relatives would have to speak for you.

Oregon has a law that lets you say what you would want the doctor to do before you get very sick or hurt. The papers that tell your choices are called an Advance Directive. The Advance Directive lets you name a person who will tell the doctor what you want if you cannot talk. This person is called your health care representative. Your health care representative does not have to be a lawyer or know all about health care. It should be someone you trust and have talked to about what you want. Your health care representative must agree in writing to make the same decisions that you would.

The Advance Directive lets you tell health care workers what they should do if you cannot speak to them. The Advance Directive lets you tell your doctor to stop life-saving help if you are near death. This tells your doctor that you do not want your life to continue if two doctors say you will not get better from an injury or sickness or disease. You will get help for pain and to make you comfortable no matter what choices you make.

The Advance Directive is only good if you sign it when you can understand it. The Advance Directive will not end unless you decide to make it for a shorter time. You also may stop your Advance Directive at any time. You have the right to decide your own health care as long as you are able to, even if you have an Advance Directive. Filling out the Advance Directive is your choice. If you do not fill out and sign the Advance Directive form, it will not change your health plan coverage and you can still see a doctor.

You may have a wish that a certain doctor or hospital cannot follow because of a moral or religious belief. You should discuss your Advance Directive with them. (42 CFR 422.128, ORS 127.505 and 127.625)

If your doctor does not follow your wishes in your Advance Directive, you can complain. A form for this is at www.healthoregon.org/hcrqi
